Mayor Small Statement on Superstorm Sandy 10 Year Anniversary

Atlantic City, N.J. (October 29, 2022) - Atlantic City Mayor Marty Small, Sr. has issued the following statement on the ten-year anniversary of Superstorm Sandy:

“Superstorm Sandy was a devastating storm. We are still feeling some of the effects here in the Great City of Atlantic City. As a City Councilman then, I stayed in Atlantic City during the storm. I remember riding around at night in the pitch black and nobody was around, then waking up the next morning and seeing all the damage. It was a trying time.

But I said back then the rumors of Atlantic City’s demise were greatly exaggerated, and I stand by that today. We received millions of dollars from the state for resiliency projects. We repaired the boardwalk. We are building bulkheads and pump stations. We have a government that is financially stable. We are in a great place right now.

I will never forget the way the country rallied around Atlantic City ten years ago. We will always be grateful for that. Atlantic City is resilient. Our people are resilient. We may get knocked down, but we get back up. And today, we are stronger than ever before.”
